20. Given the current mission, major programs, and major operational objectives of the department/agency to which you have been nominated, what in your background or employment experience do you believe affirmatively qualifies you for appointment to the position for which you have been nominated, and why do you wish to serve in that position?

Over the last decade, my work has focused on examining business practices that can impair fair competition, with the effect of hindering entrepreneurship, stunting investment, retarding innovation, undermining resiliency, and impeding widespread prosperity. Through this work, I have become very familiar with the FTC’s legal authorities and its history of policing unfair methods of competition and targeting deceptive conduct. In my prior role at the FTC, I focused on exploring how the agency could use its existing authorities to promote predictability, efficiency, and transparency. Additionally, my time serving as counsel to the House Judiciary Committee’s Subcommittee on Antitrust, Commercial, and Administrative Law involved a rigorous review of the FTC’s record, which deepened my understanding of the Commission’s responsibilities and challenges.

The FTC was designed to serve as a key guardian of fair competition and to protect consumers, and I believe it is incumbent on the agency to fulfill the full scope of its statutory mission and obligations. I am honored to be considered for a role as FTC Commissioner, and — if I am confirmed by the Senate — I hope to work with my fellow Commissioners to ensure the agency serves as an effective steward of the public trust and welfare.

21. What do you believe are your responsibilities, if confirmed, to ensure that the department/agency has proper management and accounting controls, and what experience do you have in managing a large organization?

Commissioners are charged with identifying agency priorities and ensuring the agency is fulfilling its statutory obligations through effective and efficient use of public resources. I believe that continuous oversight of the agency’s management and accounting controls is an important part of ensuring the agency’s ultimate success. If confirmed, I would leverage my experience conducting oversight of the FTC to ensure resource allocations and priorities are aligned with statutory goals. I would also carefully review any deficiencies identified by Congress, the Inspector General, and others and seek to take corrective actions as appropriate.

22. What do you believe to be the top three challenges facing the department/agency, and why?

First, the Commission should ensure that its approach to identifying unfair or deceptive conduct reflects analytic rigor and a strong grasp of empirical realities. Growing digitization across the economy requires that the FTC keep pace with evolving business practices and emerging technologies. In certain instances, this will require the agency to revisit its approach to assessing legal violations and identifying appropriate remedies to ensure that consumers, workers, and any other victims of unlawful conduct are protected.

Second, the Commission should have the ability to enjoin lawbreaking and secure redress for victims of illegal activity. The FTC has traditionally used its Section 13(b) authority to prevent unlawful conduct and obtain monetary relief, but several appellate courts have undermined this authority, which the Supreme Court is now reviewing. Further weakening of this authority would likely limit the FTC's ability to secure monetary redress and to ensure that entities do not profit from lawbreaking.

Third, the Commission should restore confidence in the agency's enforcement decisions and capacities. Over the last decade, repeat violations of FTC orders and uneven enforcement have undermined public trust in the Commission. Restoring its credibility will require a willingness to learn from new evidence and updating the Commission's approach accordingly.
